

Web Accessibility Audit

What is Web Accessibility?

Web Accessibility is identifying and addressing accessibility gaps so that your websites, both internal and external, are accessible to all people, including those with disabilities such as vision impairments, mobility impairments or hearing impairments. Section 508 was made part of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 in 1998. Its purpose is to “...require Federal agencies to make their electronic and information technology (EIT) accessible to people with disabilities.” Any and all digital communications that a company under Section 508 jurisdiction creates must be 508 compliant. This includes website content, emails, computer software, gaming systems, apps, and PDF versions of traditionally printed assets.

What Does This Mean for My Organization?

In 2017, more than 800 lawsuits were filed against companies nationwide whose websites violated the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Most companies aren't pro-active about accessibility, yet the cost of testing and remediation is far less than the potential legal ramifications.

With Protiviti's Accessibility and Usability Audit, our skilled user experience professionals apply advanced principles to the observed structure, accessibility and operation of your website. During the Audit, the reviewer will go through your website and evaluate it based on organization, function, structure, accessibility, flow, feedback and other essential criteria.

What Our Clients Say

Diversity is fundamental to Goodwill's values, so It was important for us to be confident that our intranet was accessible for all of our users. Protiviti analyzed our site and conducted individual user testing with people who have disabilities. Then they guided us in understanding the resulting user experience and accessibility reports and advised us on setting priorities for fixes. Their work was not only a service, it was valuable knowledge sharing that our team continues to use as we evolve our site.
